Membership in Selected Professional Associations, Societies, and Cooperation Partnerships

GRI 2-28

The activities of associations are typically aimed at promoting the interests of members and improving the quality of the profession. The objectives supported include education, research, or representation of the profession in the public and international field. Such activities are very useful and are fully in line with legislation. However, in addition to its undeniable benefits, membership of associations also has its risks. Particularly in those groups which bring together representatives of competing companies. Like the notorious cartel agreements between competitors, decisions by associations encouraging members to coordinate their market behavior are prohibited by law. In particular, the most serious offenses are the coordination of prices of goods and services, the disaggregation of markets, including agreements to manipulate public procurement, and the restriction of generation volumes.

The competition compliance group of the legal services unit is currently carrying out specialized training to prevent these risks. Representatives of CEZ Group companies in associations including our competitors in the affected markets are addressed.
